

Informal or Formal?

We use different words for different places and situations. Some words are casual or informal. These words are best used in spoken conversations and discussions. In writing, it is better to use more formal words.

Informal example: I was like, "Who do you think you are?"

Formal example: I said, "Who do you think you are?"

Below are sentences. Some have formal words, some use informal words. For the formal sentences, write formal in the blank. For the informal sentences, write informal in the blank.

1) The fam wants the kids home early.

2) The summer vacation is too short.

3) Well, many folks agree with the law.

4) His teacher gave a science test on Tuesday.

5) The club members elected a president.

6) Her brother had a melt down because she borrowed his phone.

7) The school bus arrived early at the library.

8) The TV is busted.

Informal or Formal?

We use different words for different places and situations. Some words are casual or informal. These words are best used in spoken conversations and discussions. In writing, it is better to use more formal words.

Informal example: I was like, "Who do you think you are?"

Formal example: I said, "Who do you think you are?"

Below are sentences. Some have formal words, some use informal words. For the formal sentences, write formal in the blank. For the informal sentences, write informal in the blank.

Actual student's sentences will vary.

1) The fam wants the kids home early. informal

2) The summer vacation is too short. formal

3) Well, many folks agree with the law. informal

4) His teacher gave a science test on Tuesday. formal

5) The club members elected a president. formal

6) Her brother had a melt down because she borrowed his phone. informal

7) The school bus arrived early at the library. formal

8) The TV is busted. informal
